

ABSTRACT

An electroluminescence display device comprising a thin film transistor and an electroluminescence element wherein the electroluminescence element's anode and a portion of the thin film transistor's source/drain electrode are deposited on to a same surface and the electroluminescence element's anode and the portion of the thin film transistor's source/drain electrode overlap and make an electrical contact with improved contact resistance.